Montgomery County Survey Shows Capable Supervision But Need of Correlation.

Direct and canable supervision; and a fair beginning of introduction with the organization in plenty of time the Montgomery county public school nasium. system in the recently completed educational survey of the county.

But there are also some bad things included in the findings of the investigators, according to the statement of the United States Bureau of Education. These are summarized as a preponderance of one-room schools and the ab-sence of consolidation; defective methods of lighting, heating, ventila-pective members is the 'doubl

Ask More Correlation.

This would give one to every thirtyfive schools. In the matter of curriculum, it is pointed out that little except the common branches are included in the course of study, and the recommendation of the survey makers is that the studies pursued be more closely corre-lated with the life and the interests of the community. The survey report sums up the needs of the Montgomery county school system by declaring that more time should be devoted to the study of elementary agriculture domesstudy of elementary agriculture, domes-tic science, manual training, music and drawing, and the common branches should be taught in the terms of these subjects. The county superintendent is the one, go the report makes positive, who should readjust the work of the schools, but it is pointed out that he would be unable alone to do this and is is the need of assistants again

Touching on the further improvement the school system in the county, the surveyors argue that the number of schools in the country, from a standpoint of efficiency and economy, is too of schools in the country, from a stand-point of efficiency and economy, is too great.
